3. The investment strategy of the Funds involves investments in assets for which no public market exists. Many of these investments lack substantial public information, and the Funds will rely on its own due diligence efforts to gather sufficient information to assess the associated risks and potential returns. As a result, there is an increased risk that the Funds may invest based on incomplete or inaccurate information, which could adversely affect the Funds' investment performance and impact both the initial and ultimate valuations of such investments. This could expose the Funds to greater risks than investments in established, publicly traded companies, potentially leading to lower investment returns.

Any performance figures presented herein are estimated, based on incomplete data, and subject to revision. Actual performance, once audited, may differ from the estimates provided. Given the nature of the underlying companies in which the Funds may invest, the Funds should be regarded as a more volatile and higher-risk investment.
